

the sea-god sleeps outside my door quietly lapping pebbled shores with blue-green tongues and frothing mouths
until its slumber
is disturbed

gods of stony desert plains haunt her maddening steps until she stumbles, breaking open, bleeding hands upon the jagged and uneven steppe
(before the pallid rain)